PERSONAL DESCRIPTION

My father is a Rav and my mother is a Psychiatrist, I suppose it is in my genes that I am passionate about Torah and mitzvos and helping others. I am the oldest of seven children and as a man I do enjoy sports but more on the interactive side than spectator. If you like to shoot hoops I'm up for it, we can swim, bike, skate, ski whatever and if I haven't tried it and you love it I will make my utmost effort to give it a go.

My family is very important to me as we are very close. We were brought up on the ideals of unconditional love and non judgment. We left the parenting to the parents and were each others best friends. As the oldest I was often asked by family and friends for advice and they trusted me and came back for more.

While learning in my amazing yeshiva one of my Rebbeim suggested that since I was learning for Semicha, having that background along with my personal background and personality, I should think about Life Coaching as a career and base my guidance on true Torah Values of equality, fairness, ability, believing in oneself and helping oneself to be the best person they can be. That was great advice because studying for my certification and learning the tools they taught me about not "telling" a client what to do but guiding him to choose his path by looking down the road to see the outcome of each choice one makes before making it, has taken the burden of responsibility off my shoulders. It's hard to carry the weight of the advice you give others praying that it works out for them and you didn't make an error in judgement.

My values are very defined, Yiddishkeit, Torah, Middos Tovos and Sholom Bayis. I see myself having a best friend and support system with my wife, laying the foundation for a true torah home in the future.

LOOKING FOR

I know that what I believe I am looking for may not be what Hashem has in mind for me, so I hope he will send me an attractive wife who finds me attractive. A wife who is compatible to my height and build. A wife I can respect and respects me because respect is the foundation for any good and lasting relationship. A wife who chooses to help me when I need it as I help her when she does. A wife who shares my values and will support my hopes and dreams as I would like to support hers. A wife who will be my "ezer K'negdo, a good mother to my children and a great role model for them and me. A wife who will be willing to love my family as I do and feel comfortable to be a part of our family as I would love to feel comfortable being a part of hers. A wife who understands as I do that one cannot always be right and happy at the same time and is therefore capable of being mevater at times and/or compromise so I don't carry that burden alone, after all I am only human.
